| Clinical Condition The patient is an 84-year-old White male recently discharged home following hospitalization, surgery, and a subsequent Requiring Homecare:rehabilitation stay. He currently resides in the basement level of his daughter's home, while his daughter and her family occupy the upper level. Upon the nurse's arrival, the patient was in the basement area and was later joined by his son-in-law. The patient was alert, awake, and oriented to person, place, and time. He is hard of hearing and utilizes one hearing aid in the left ear. Neurological assessment revealed positive facial symmetry and pupils equal, round, and reactive to light. The patient presented with weak hand grasps, contracted fingers, and trace edema in the extremities. Education was provided regarding limb elevation to assist with edema management. The lower extremities were noted to have abnormalities consistent with weakness and limited mobility. Abdominal assessment revealed a distended but soft and non-tender abdomen with active bowel sounds in all four quadrants. The patient is incontinent of bladder but denies dysuria, burning, or other urinary discomfort. He denies pain at the time of assessment. The patient uses a specialized walker with arm supports (bilateral platform walker) for ambulation. A prior surgical incision to the groin was reported but not visible during the visit. The family reported that a wheelchair and hospital bed were scheduled for delivery on the day of the visit to assist with mobility and safety within the home. The patient's daughter manages and prepares his medications. The patient is able to feed himself with setup assistance and remained pleasant and cooperative throughout the assessment. | muscle weakness. Due to recent hospitalization and cardiac procedure, the patient currently demonstrates generalized weakness, deconditioning, impaired balance, reduced endurance, and decreased functional mobility. These deficits have resulted in increased dependence with transfers, ambulation, and activities of daily living, placing the patient at elevated risk for falls and potential rehospitalization within the home environment. Occupational therapy evaluation was completed to assess functional performance with activities of daily living and transfers. The patient is able to complete upper and lower body dressing with increased time and effort. He currently receives assistance from a private caregiver twice weekly for support with activities of daily living and instrumental activities of daily living. Bilateral upper extremity weakness and limited active range of motion contribute to difficulty with certain functional tasks, including self-feeding. Occupational therapy interventions will focus on improving bilateral upper extremity strength and range of motion, as well as training in the use of adaptive equipment, including built-up utensils, to improve independence and ease with self-feeding. Therapeutic exercises and endurance training will also be implemented to enhance safety and performance with daily activities. Skilled physical therapy services are medically necessary to address deficits in strength, balance, gait stability, and functional mobility. The patient requires assistance with transfers and ambulation and demonstrates reduced activity tolerance related to his cardiac history and post-operative status. Physical therapy interventions will focus on strengthening, balance retraining, gait training with the platform walker, and functional mobility training to improve safety and maximize independence in the home environment. Education has been provided to the patient and family regarding fall prevention and safe mobility strategies. The interdisciplinary plan of care includes continued skilled nursing oversight, physical therapy, and occupational therapy services aimed at improving strength, mobility, and endurance while supporting the patient's ability to safely remain in the home and reduce the risk of further functional decline or rehospitalization. |  |                       |                                                                                                                           |                                 |  |
